History of the American Front Porch
 Presented by Sandy Heiler

For a century and a half, from the beginning of the Republic until the Second World War, Americans engaged in a love affair with an architectural feature that no one actually needed but almost everyone wanted—a front porch. This talk is partly about the architectural styles where the front porch had a starring role and about the social and economic forces and the people that made the porch so popular during the 19th and early 20th centuries.
